CAREGIVER Work Environment

Caregivers can work in a variety of environments depending on the patient's situation. They can work in hospitals, retirement communities (assisted living and independent living), rehab centers and private home settings.

In most cases, a caregiver's role is to allow the client or patient to age in place. Seniors wish to remain in their homes for the next ten years.

Caregivers generally enable their clients to stay in their homes longer than would be possible without their assistance.

Assistance with activities of daily living is critical for seniors to maintain their independence. Companions also without formal training do not perform direct personal Care but are more limited to providing comfort and companionship to those who cannot be left alone and unsupervised.
